Patient Consent to the Practice Text Messaging Service

Dear Patient

Under the new GDPR from May 2018, NHS England will allow General Practice to send text messages to registered patients with implied consent. Examples of potentially justifiable NHS business uses of SMS may include:

- Reminders about appointments booked, or any changes to booked appointments
- Notifications of changes to premises opening times or our contact details
- Information about the availability of a new or changed service
- Reminders about any annual review or health checks that are needed
- Information about test results or requests for patients to contact us to discuss test results or other clinical issues

Besides the above “implied consent”, we would also like to request your direct consent for us to be able to send you text messages about any health campaign events we might be running, including those that might be organised by other healthcare organisations or our patient participation group.

Please fill out the consent form below if you would like to provide or amend your consent to our text messaging service. Please also allow us 14 days to get your consent information updated to our system. Many thanks.
